ARGUMENT.

Spec
The Romantic Historical Opera entitled CAPTAIN COOK, by SANDS W. FORMAN and NOAH BRANDT, tells the story of the landing of Captain COOK on the Island of Hawaii, 1778. The bold mariner is in command of a large body of sailors and marines from the exploring ships "Resolute" and "Discovery." The opening scene exhibits the landing upon the coral strand of a company of sailors and marines in charge of a Lieutenant and minor officers, and accompanied by the ship's surgeon, CUPPLES. They have come ashore in search of wood, water, and whatever fruits and provisions are to be had. Overjoyed at their release from the confinement of a long and tedious voyage, they make the place resound with their songs and laughter. The echoes of their merriment being heard on board the two ships in the offing, it is not long before Captain COOK, his staff of officers and the entire ship's company, also come ashore. He then commands the earlier comers to go upon their errand, leaving him and the surgeon alone. In the meantime a procession of natives—male and female, including many little children—appear, bearing articles of sacrifice. Long before this, it had been foretold by the native soothsayers and priests that some day a white God would come among them from across the ocean, and that he was to be obeyed even to the sharing of the nation's throne and the giving up to the white God and his followers of their fairest daughters. The procession, which is on its way to the fiery mountain to sacrifice to the Goddess PELE, immediately stop in their march and fall down, worshipping the great Captain. Amicable arrangements are made and the fair Princess IA IA, daughter of the King, is at once offered Captain COOK for a bride, the other maidens pairing with the officers and crew. The first act ends in general rejoicing.

The Second Act opens with preparations for the wedding of COOK and the Princess. Large stone idols are about on every side, and the natives and seamen are dressed in their gala attire. In the midst of the merry making there comes upon the scene OPONU—a sub-chief from a neighboring island—to whom the Princess had been betrothed in her childhood. Finding out the cause of all the feasting and rejoicing, he turns upon KORO BOLA and excitedly questions him. He becomes furious at the impending loss of his promised bride and sings indignantly of the wrong that has been done him. In the meantime the Princess comes upon the scene, meets OPONU, her old lover, and renews her vows. While they are singing COOK approaches and overhears their song. He, too, becomes furious and would make an onslaught on the sub-chief. Enter all the Natives and Sailors, and when the entire assemblage are about to join in bloody combat, a sudden eruption of Mauna Loa illumines the heavens, the mountains topple and sway, great streams of fiery lava rushing down their sides. The stone idols and the temple are crumbled into dust, and the natives, believing that the Goddess PELE of the volcano is angered at their treachery, throw down their weapons and prostrate themselves to the ground. This tableau ends the second act.

In the Third Act Captain COOK and his sailors have become tired of their idle life and begin to think of sailing away. The natives being greatly subdued and no longer dangerous, COOK begins to think of his wife and babies at home, and the sailors of the Nancies and Pollies "in Plymouth Town hard by the shore."

The King, OPONU and COOK have reconciled all their differences and great preparations are being made for the nuptials of the Princess and her lover.

The last scene represents the wedding of OPONU and IA IA on the beach, with COOK and his followers in their boats making for the ships in the distance, singing a long farewell, which is responded to by the natives.

Maestoso. M.M. 76 = ♩

The musical score is written for piano and grand staff. It begins with a tempo marking of Maestoso and a metronome marking of M.M. 76 = ♩. The key signature is one sharp (F#) and the time signature is 4/4. The score consists of six systems of music. The first system shows a piano introduction with a forte (f) dynamic. The second system continues with piano accompaniment. The third system features a melody in the right hand with triplets and a dynamic of mf, while the left hand provides a bass line. The fourth system includes a rit. (ritardando) marking. The fifth system is marked Andante and mf, with a ped. (pedal) instruction and the instruction Il melodia sostenuto. The sixth system continues the Andante section with multiple ped. markings. The score concludes with a final chord.

First system of musical notation. Treble clef, key signature of two sharps (F# and C#). The piece begins with a forte (f) dynamic. The right hand features a triplet of eighth notes. The left hand has a steady accompaniment. Pedal markings (ped.) and asterisks (*) are present below the staff.

Second system of musical notation. The right hand continues with a melodic line, marked mezzo-forte (mf). The left hand has a triplet of eighth notes. Pedal markings (ped.) and asterisks (*) are present below the staff.

Third system of musical notation. The right hand continues with a melodic line. The left hand has a triplet of eighth notes. The dynamic changes to piano (p). Pedal markings (ped.) and asterisks (*) are present below the staff.

Fourth system of musical notation. The right hand continues with a melodic line. The left hand has a triplet of eighth notes. Pedal markings (ped.) and asterisks (*) are present below the staff.

Fifth system of musical notation. The tempo is marked Allegro. 100-♩. The right hand has a melodic line. The left hand has a steady accompaniment. The dynamic changes to mezzo-forte (mf) and then forte (f). A triplet of eighth notes is present in the right hand. Pedal markings (ped.) and asterisks (*) are present below the staff.

Sixth system of musical notation. The right hand continues with a melodic line. The left hand has a steady accompaniment. A triplet of eighth notes is present in the right hand. Pedal markings (ped.) and asterisks (*) are present below the staff.

First system of musical notation. The right hand features a melodic line with a triplet of sixteenth notes marked with a '3' and an 'x'. The left hand plays a steady accompaniment of chords.

Second system of musical notation. The right hand has a long melodic phrase with a slur and a dynamic marking of ff. The left hand continues with chordal accompaniment.

Third system of musical notation. The right hand continues the melodic line. The left hand accompaniment consists of chords.

Fifth system of musical notation. The right hand has a melodic phrase with a slur and a dynamic marking of ff. The left hand accompaniment includes a ped. marking and an asterisk. The lyrics "strin gen do e cres cen do" are written below the right hand staff.

Marciale.

The first system of the musical score for 'Marciale'. It consists of two staves, a treble clef on top and a bass clef on the bottom. The key signature has two sharps (F# and C#), and the time signature is 2/4. The music begins with a forte (f) dynamic. The right hand plays a rhythmic melody of eighth and sixteenth notes, while the left hand provides a simple harmonic accompaniment.

The second system of the musical score. It continues the two-staff format. The right hand features a more complex melodic line with slurs and ties. A cres. (crescendo) marking is placed above the right staff. The left hand continues with a steady accompaniment.

The third system of the musical score. The right hand has a melodic line with some chromaticism and slurs. A fz (forzando) marking is present. The left hand accompaniment remains consistent with the previous systems.

The fourth system of the musical score. The right hand has a melodic line with some chromaticism and slurs. The left hand accompaniment continues with a steady rhythm.

The sixth system of the musical score. The right hand has a melodic line with some chromaticism and slurs. The left hand accompaniment continues with a steady rhythm.

First system of musical notation, consisting of a grand staff with treble and bass clefs. The music features a complex texture with many beamed notes and rests.

Second system of musical notation, continuing the piece with similar complex textures and rhythmic patterns.

Third system of musical notation, featuring a dynamic marking of f (forte) and various articulation marks.

Fourth system of musical notation, including a triplet of notes in the treble clef.

Fifth system of musical notation, featuring another triplet of notes in the treble clef.

Sixth system of musical notation, concluding the page with a dynamic marking of ff (fortissimo) and a fermata over a note in the treble clef.

First system of musical notation, featuring a grand staff with treble and bass clefs. The music consists of several measures with various note values and rests.

Second system of musical notation. The right-hand part includes the dynamic marking mf and the instruction cres. (crescendo). The left-hand part includes the instruction ped. (pedal) with a line underneath. The system concludes with the vocal syllable do.

Third system of musical notation. The right-hand part includes the instruction string. (string) and the vocal syllable gen. The left-hand part includes the instruction ped. (pedal) with two asterisks () marking specific points. The system concludes with the vocal syllable do.

Fourth system of musical notation. The right-hand part includes the dynamic marking ff (fortissimo). The system features complex chordal textures and melodic lines in both hands.

Fifth system of musical notation, continuing the complex textures from the previous system with various chordal and melodic elements.

Sixth system of musical notation, concluding the page with a ff (fortissimo) dynamic marking and dense musical textures.

First system of musical notation, featuring a grand staff with treble and bass clefs. The music includes a melodic line in the treble and a supporting bass line. A dynamic marking of mf is present.

Second system of musical notation, continuing the piece with similar melodic and bass line structures.

Piu vivo.

Third system of musical notation, marked with a forte dynamic ff. The tempo instruction Piu vivo. is positioned above the staff.

Fourth system of musical notation, continuing the piece with a forte dynamic ff.

Fifth system of musical notation, featuring a melodic line with many beamed notes and a bass line with chords. A dynamic marking of ff is present.

Sixth system of musical notation, concluding the piece with a melodic line and a bass line. A dynamic marking of ff is present.

WEDDING MARCH.

At the beginning of the march a procession of Priests and Sooth-sayers enter bearing gifts for Cook and the Princess, and articles of sacrifice for the Gods. They are followed by a company of Warriors and Marines, in the center of which march, hand in hand, the King Kalanopuu and Capt. Cook. They are followed by the Princess attended by her tire women and hand maidens, the entire cortege followed by the native women and children.

Cook and the King proceed to the front of the stage and ascend to the seats arranged for them to the left of the entrance of the temple, the warriors and Cook's followers and the natives ranging themselves on either side.

DIALOGUE

— OF THE —

ROMANTIC HISTORICAL OPERA

Captain Cook

LIBRETTO BY SANDS W. FORMAN

MUSIC BY NOAH BRANDT

ACT I—SCENE I.

A sandy beach and coral strand in the foreground; in the back, a stretch of water and the two ships of CAPT. COOK—the Resolute and Discovery—at anchor; high sterns, and with rows of small windows aft, according to the manner of ships of the time. The extreme background, a drop, showing the volcano Mauna Loa in the far distance with puffs of smoke ascending from same at regular intervals. On the same drop, nearer down towards beach, great palms and cocoa trees, and other tropical verdure.

The Boatswain, the Ship's Surgeon, a Lieutenant of Marines, and Seamen; also, a squad of Marines.

Dialogue 1.

MAIRLEY. So ho, so ho, there shipmates. Its bawling again the same old song, is it? Always the winds and storms, and the lasses left behind. Why, brace up, my hearties—brace up and belay. The storms are bound to come, the winds to blow, and the lassies to play you false.

[All turn to him murmuring words of dissent.]

THE LIEUTENANT OF MARINES. Not so Not so, you old croaker. What lassie anyway could ever be true to you, you rusty old marlinspike?

MAIRLEY. To me, is it? To me, the once handsome Mairley? Aye, mark ye lads. I've had my day among 'em, and I found 'em all alike. Fond enough, indeed, when you're in port and your wallet well filled; but false, aye false and forgetful, when you're away and afloat. And yet, you lubbers, you would bellow and would blubber about these frail but false syrens.

[He sings, "Well, I never saw a lubber," etc.]

Dialogue 2

[Entrance of CAPT. COOK.]

CUPPLES. Look alive there, my lads, for as I live the gallant Captain comes sailing shoreward in his gig with the ship's company following. Stand ready to salute.

[They all fall in and stand ready to receive him. He comes ashore and says:]

Dialogue 3.

CAPT. COOK. Well, by all that's good, friend Cupples, you have indeed picked out a pleasant landing. All nature smiles in this sweet spot, and after the many months of our rude buffeting, I feel as though I could linger here for many a day to come.

CUPPLES. It is indeed, my Captain, a most gracious haven, and if the signs belie not themselves, we may find here an abundant supply of wood and water, and methinks me too of fruit and the other products of the soil to which we have too long been comparative strangers.

CAPT. COOK. Pray you, good Cupples, your guess be not amiss, for right sore need have we of the supplies of which you speak. Let's you and I then tarry here awhile, and in the meantime have the men go forward in search of what we need.

[To Mairley.] Ho there, Master Mairley. You and your men advance into the forest, fill your casks, gather what provender you can, and return to this spot when you have done your work, or before, if the signal gun should call you. Be wary, Master Mairley, for you know not what dangers may lurk in unknown places.

MAIRLEY. Aye, aye, Captain. I'll keep an eye to every quarter, and if old Mairley's caught napping, it will be the first time in all his forty years of cruising. Take up your casks, mates, and forward.

[Exit all but COOK and the Surgeon, the crew singing as they go, "Heave ho and Haul."]

Dialogue 4.

CAPT. COOK and CUPPLES.

CAPT. COOK. And now, friend Cupples, that we are left for a time to ourselves, let's cast us down and drink in the pleasure of this gorgeous scene.

[They seat themselves upon the sward.]

COOK (continuing). How grand indeed is all about us. How blue the skies, how pure the air, and the lofty, heaven-piercing mountains seem to stand like mighty monitors o'er all about us. Why, look you there [pointing to the volcano], if mine eyes deceive me not, that one must be a chimney for the inward fires, for as I live it belches smoke at every throb.

[They pause for a time and gaze amazed. The sounds of a chant are heard in the distance, the natives not yet appearing.]

CUPPLES. Why, as I live, methinks I hear the echo of some strange chant coming from yonder wood. Why, what can it be?

CAPT. COOK. And I too, good Cupples, doth hear it now. 'Tis not our people, for no British sailor e'er sang such song as that.

CUPPLES. No, 'tis rather the song of some savage race—some weird and melancholy chant of sacrifice—and if I mistake me not it comes nearer to us now. Let us withdraw a pace and see what follows.

[They stand aside as the sacrificial procession of natives enters on the stage.]

Dialogue 5.

[CAPTAIN COOK TO KALANOPUU.]

CAPT. COOK. Right well and fair dost thou address me, Great King, and I believe full well that thou dost speak the truth. But why would'st thou that I should share thy throne? Thou surely canst rule as well alone?

THE KING. Aye, fair stranger, and so I can; but what the gods have ordered that must we obey, and long since, speaking out of the mouths of their soothsayers, aye, even from the lips of the wise and pious Koko Bola here, our friend—have they foretold thy coming, and ordained the sharing of my throne.

CAPT. COOK. But, my good brother and mighty King, this is too much. Your friendship doth o'erpower me.

THE KING. Too much, too much! Nay, how could too much be done the chosen of the gods? But more there is in store for thee and thine. Seest thou there the lovely Ia Ia, the royal Princess, daughter mine. She, too, shall be thy bride.

[IA IA blushing and striving to hide her confusion by retiring partially amid the maidens about her.]

Yes, the most graceful Fern Leaf in all the land I give to thee to be thy Queen.

[COOK gazes eagerly at IA IA, who, becoming emboldened, returns his glances.]

MAIRLEY (in an aside to his fellows). Well, my mates, what do you think of it all? Surely if the Captain is going to be a god, what are we, his followers? Why arn't we angels as well? Why, I can feel the wings sprouting between my shoulders already. Let's make acquaintance amid this heavenly company.

[The sailors laugh loudly and begin to mingle with the native maidens, who take to their advances kindly.]

THE KING. And thy followers, too, may choose among this beauteous company for their mates, for have not the gods ordained that thee and thine should share of all we have?

CAPT. COOK. But how know'st thou that I may find favor with the lovely Princess; and how may I know if her heart be not given to another?

CUPPLES (aside). Mark ye now, but the skipper's coming on. 'Tis a lucky thing indeed for him he's so many leagues from Plymouth and the lovely Mistress Cook.

MAIRLEY (aside). And it's a lucky thing for you, too, old Sawbones, that you, too, are just as far away.

[Cupples, too, has been making up to a dusky maiden.]

[Looking about he sees that all the crew have singled out a maiden, says himself.]

Well, on my soul, if I'm not the only bachelor among them.

[He sidles up to the oldest and homeliest of the natives.]

As the angels are pairing off, I'll make one of the heavenly crew myself. Come hither, pretty maiden, for I too have a pretty tale to pour into thine ears.

[They retire evidently much pleased with the stranger.]

CAPT. COOK (advancing to IA IA). Thou hast heard the words of the mighty King, thy father, sweet Princess, and not for all the world—for the glory of sharing the throne—would I do ought to lacerate thy young heart. I have seen now, thou gracious Princess, that I am much taken with thy outward charms, but if thou lik'st me not, I pray thee I will importune thee no more.

IA IA. Right kindly spoken are thy words, fair stranger, and right well I honor thee for them; but thou know'st that what the gods have willed, that must we all obey.

CAPT. COOK. In sooth 'tis so, fair Princess; but if thy heart's engaged elsewhere, far be it from me, a true Briton, to compel thee to that thou wouldst not.

IA IA. Nay, press me not farther, for have I not told thee that what the gods and my royal father doth command, that must I obey?

CAPT. COOK. And dost thou think then, my dusky goddess, that thou couldst love me—dost think thy young heart could beat responsive to mine own? Bethink thee, my peerless Ia Ia, I am but a stranger, an acquaintance of an hour.

[Becoming more animated and tender.]

Why who, my darling Fern Leaf, has taught thee now to love? Why, tell me what thou know'st of love?

[IA IA sings, "A Fern Leaf grew," etc.]

DIALOGUE.

Dialogue 6.

CAPTAIN COOK. (To Kalanopuu.) Most gracious king, I know not what to say. Right well I learn from the plaintive pleading of thy daughter fair, that already her young heart hath been touched by cupid's dart, and yet e'en now, although I've known her scarce an hour, my soul goes out to her, and right glad were I to call her mine.

KALANOPUU. And so thou shalt—and so thou shalt, my royal brother. What wouldst thou have of me? that I should hearken to the ravings of a love-sick maid. 'Tis but the memory of some girlish meeting that doth vex her youthful mind.

(To IA IA.) Why, daughter mine, art thou not the same obedient child that I have cherished all these years, and wouldst thou not honor the wishes of the gods as well as of thy poor old father?

IA IA. Thy will thou knowest has ever been my law, and what the gods would have, to that must I submit.

CAPT. COOK. Nay, nay, sweet maid. If thy heart be not inclined, think not that I will force thee 'gainst thy will.

KALANOPUU. Tut, tut, I say! Let's have no more of this. My royal word is pledged, and here do I command that if my fair brother so wills, he shall have the Princess for his bride.

CAPT. COOK. If I so will? Why! by all the gods above, I swear me now, that mine every desire cries out for the possession of this beauteous maid.

(To IA IA.) If thou canst bear with me, gracious Princess, right gladly will I link my fate with thine.

IA IA. What the gods have willed and what my sire doth wish, to that I yield. If thou wouldst take me as I am, then I am thine forevermore.

CAPT. COOK. If I would take thee? My precious maid, e'en now I love as ne'er I loved before. Thy sweet humility and submission hath so charmed my heart, that already art thou its mistress and ruler of my every thought. And now, I pray thee, announce to thy maidens and the women of thy train, the pleasing news, that they make for the coming nuptials the proper preparation.

IA IA (turning to her suit.) Know ye then, my sisters—companions of my youth—that I, the Princess Ia Ia, hath chosen for my husband and the guardian of my love, the fair god and stranger who stands beside me.

[She sings, "Sing Your Loudest, etc."]

(End of Act 1.)

ACT II—SCENE I.

Dialogue 7.

[Oponui reappears and encounters the soothsayer Koko Bola, who has just finished his song.]

OPONU. (To Koko Bola.) And so 'tis to you—you hoary-headed trickster; you charlatan; you pious knave—that I owe the loss of my long promised bride; 'tis you, then, who have fooled this weak old man, her father.

KOKO BOLA. (Retreating and protesting by his cringing attitude.) Nay, nay, friend Oponui; I pray thee hold thy temper for awhile and listen.

OPONU. Hold my temper! dost thou say, thou prating hypocrite? Nay, and if I hold my hand and slay thee not where thou standest, indeed thou hast much to be thankful for.

[Koko Bola falls groveling to the ground, exhibiting every sign of abject fear.]

OPONU. Now tell me by what hellish art hast thou so far perverted the mind of the fair Princess Ia Ia, that she has consented to become the bride of this pale-faced wanderer? Or hast thou been bought by the presents of this mysterious stranger to do his bidding? Tell me, tell me! thou false-hearted priest, and quickly, too, or by the gods thou dost profane by thy mock homage, I will pierce thy fat paunch with this, my goodly spear, and leave thee here, a fitting banquet for the carrion birds.

KOKO BOLA. (In abject terror.) I pray thee, gallant Prince, bear with me but a while and I will tell thee all. Thou knowst how oft I cast the horoscope and how the gods have favored me—thine humble servant—with their countenance. Well—

OPONU. Now, by all the powers, if thou dost not cease thy babbling, I know not if I may hold my hand. Talk not to me as thou dost prate to those who know thee not. Come to the point, and let me know why thou hast done this thing.

KOKO BOLA. Well, then, most gracious Prince, the times were dull and dismal and the sacrificial offerings slowly coming in. Then what had I to do? Each day this hitherto well-rounded paunch grew smaller yet. Some festal function I knew was only left to bring the people back to their duty. The strangers came—the ancient prophecy of the coming of the white-faced god was well-remembered by me, and then I saw my opportunity. I knew full well that if I could arrange these nuptials, again the larder of the Priestly temples would be replenished, and again the stomach of the holy Koko Bola would take on its old-time proportions. And, in the midst of all, most gracious Prince, I forgot that she and thou had lovers been in the long ago.

OPONU. Thou canting priest, 'tis alone thy well told tale that holds my hand; but mark me now, if thou canst so well this treachery arrange, so surely too must thou be able to undo it again. Now listen and make note. Undo this thing; return to me my promised bride and send away this stranger, who would thwart me, or by all the gods I'll slay thee ere the sun goes down.

KOKO BOLA. Thy will shall be my law, and if the cunning of my tongue hath not left me, I promise thee that all shall be made aright, and quickly too. But hark! I heard the tramp of many feet, and if I mistake not 'tis the wedding party and their guests coming to the temple. Withdraw for a time, most noble Prince, and if I may, I'll strive to mend this unfortunate mischance.

[They both retire. Enter, a Ballet, at the conclusion of which the procession takes its way to the entrance of the Temple, IA IA and her tire women bringing up the rear. Oponui comes forward at this moment, and the Princess, seeing him, halts when he approaches nearer. Oponui (Recit., etc.), "Yes, speak to her I must," etc.]

ACT III—SCENE 1.

The ruins of the overthrown Temples and Idols are strewn about, but to the left has been erected an altar decked with flowers, in preparation for the coming nuptials. The scene, one of tropical beauty, same as first, with coral strand and Cook's ships in the offing.

Monologue 8.

KOKO BOLA. Oh, it's all very well to be the Grand High Priest and Keeper of His Majesty's Conscience, but let me tell you I've had about enough of it. What with trying to marry off the lovely Princess, to propitiate the gods, to keep this well rounded stomach from shrinking, and to stop this fiery Oponui from spitting me with his long handled spear, I assure you I'm about distraught. But still it might be worse. This white God, or Devil, is not such a bad fellow after all, and when I told him what a pretty mess I'd made, and that the Princess didn't love him after all, but was only complying with her father's wishes, he gracefully resigned and agreed to clear out in good order.

SCENE 2.

Transformation of scene to the first Act.

Dialogue 9.

[CAPTAIN COOK to CUPPLES and his followers, about to embark for the ships.]

CAPT. COOK. Look lively now, my lads, for the wind serves amain, the tide's in our favor, and in an hour we'll have the anchor weighed and be speeding homeward to good old Plymouth by the Shore.

CUPPLES. And though we've loved and lost, my Captain, yet we know full well there are fairer faces and more loyal hearts awaiting our home coming. Is it not so?

CAPT. COOK. In sooth 'tis so, and let us when we set our foot on shore, look back upon this pleasant meeting with these simple islanders as to some beautiful dream, never to be forgotten. But let it be a dream—only a dream, good Cupples—for what would those fond ones say at home if they only knew the truth? (aside) and yet God knows I could have loved that gentle, shrinking maiden. (He sighs.) 'Tis past and gone, however, and now let's up and away.

CUPPLES. And without one word of parting to the dear ones left behind?

CAPT. COOK. Well said, my dear old friend, well said indeed; and here do I protest that no man in all the world doth wish these gentle heathens greater good than Captain Cook. And to the fairest maid in all the land and her gallant lord, the noble Oponui, do I make my devoir and wish them long life and happiness.

[The ship's company join in cheers for the bride and groom.]

MAIRLEY. And I, too, most gallant Captain, would add a word to thine, and with your leave. I too have loved and lost, but so oft I've done the thing before I'm sure I'll stand it till I've met my Polly in old Plymouth. 'Twas not all a dream with me. No, by my soul 'twas not, but I hope you'll call it so, each and every one, and bear me out, for as the old song goeth, "My Polly hath a heavy hand." You know the rest.

CAPT. COOK. E'en now I heard the sound of merriment, and through the bending boughs I see the wedding company approaching. Let it not be said that a British sailor e'er drew breath who honored not the host who did him well. Let us now to the ships, and while the lovely Princess renews her vows before the altar there, we'll wish her love and happiness, and pledge it in a hearty one, two, three. (They cheer.)

[Fanfare. Enter the King and the wedding party coming down the altar.]

Dialogue 10.

THE KING. Right well, my royal brother that was to be, do I appreciate thine homage and thy kindly disposition, and, speaking for my people, I proclaim it here that I do wish thee, too, a pleasant voyage and a hearty welcome home.

IA IA. And I, too, most gallant captain, would wish thee well, and though 'tis said "The saddest words of tongue or pen, are only these, It might have been," I know thou wilt forgive me, and in the days to come, when thou art far away, sometime thy memory incline to the little Fern Leaf whom thou wert pleased to look upon with other than a passing eye.

CAPT. COOK. Aye, that in truth I will, thou sweet daughter of the tropics; and when the little dusky broad should cluster about thy knee, and the gallant, stalwart Oponui, their father, shall stand beside thee, proud and happy, I pray thee tell them, now and then, the story of the coming of Captain Cook.

OPONU. Rest content, most gracious stranger, for Oponui shall ever cherish none but pleasant memories of thy unlooked for coming. So fare the well, and may thy future be as full of happiness as is the present I enjoy.

[Oponui and Ia Ia sing their duct. Finale. Chorus, and etc.]

HAWAIIAN BALLET.

The FIRST NUMBER represents the Dance of the Athletes, the Spear Throwers, the Surf Riders, the Swimmers and Paddlers of the Canoe.

The SECOND NUMBER represents the attendants of the Goddess Pele; these are tall, straight-limbed Maidens, with torch in hand, and long flowing locks.

The THIRD NUMBER represents the Goddess Pele and the Native Champion Sled (Papa) Runner, Kahawale, who enter, coming down the mountain side on swift runners, Pele in advance. Kahawale makes love to the Goddess, who scorns his addresses.

The FOURTH NUMBER represents the defeat of Kahawale in his love-making, the attendants, athletes and all coming to the support of Pele, Kahawale making his exit, humiliated and in disgrace.
