ARGUMENT.

THE story of Callirhoë (καλός, beautiful, and ῥοή, a stream) is thus related by Pausanias in the 21st Chapter of the 7th Book of his "Itinerary of Greece." The traveller is speaking of the antiquities of Patræ (the modern Patras) :—

"In this part of the city too there is a temple of Bacchus, who is called Calydonius: for the statue of the god was brought from Calydon. While Calydon stood, Coresus was one of the priests of Bacchus, who suffered very unjustly through love. For he was in love with a virgin Callirhoë, but so unfortunately that the hatred of the virgin rose in proportion to the ardour of his love. When Coresus, therefore, found that he was unable, either by prayers or gifts, to move the virgin to love him, he came in a suppliant posture to the statue of Bacchus, who heard the prayer of his priest, and afflicted the Calydonians with a degree of insanity like that produced by intoxication, through which great numbers of them continually perished. In consequence of this the inhabitants fled to the oracle in Dodona; for at that time those that dwelt here, as also the Ætolians, and their neighbours the Acarnanes and Epirots, placed great confidence in the oracles which were delivered from the oak, and in the prophetic properties of doves. The oracle, therefore, of Dodona told them that their calamity was produced by the anger of Bacchus, and that they would not be liberated from their disease till Coresus either sacrificed Callirhoë, or some other person who had the courage to die in her stead. As the virgin, however, found no one willing to procure her safety by dying for her, she fled for refuge to those by whom she had been educated; but here finding no assistance, nothing now remained for her but to die. Everything, therefore, being prepared for the sacrifice, agreeably to the admonition of the Dodonean oracle, she was led after the manner of a victim to the altar. Coresus himself presided over the sacrifice; but he, giving way to his love and not to his anger, slew himself instead of Callirhoë, and by this means gave the most insane specimen of love of any person we are acquainted with. Callirhoë, however, as soon as she saw that Coresus had slain himself, found her hatred of the youth vanish, and love succeed in its stead. Hence, through pity of Coresus and shame for her behaviour towards him, she cut her throat by the fountain which is not far from the port in Calydon. And this fountain afterwards was called Callirhoë from the name of the virgin."*

With the exception of the omission of the incident of Callirhoë's flight, and the change in the catastrophe, the libretto of the present Cantata follows closely the story as told by Pausanias. The interpretation of the oracle at Dodona by priestesses has been adopted in preference to the earlier custom, according to which the will of Zeus was declared by men. The presence of the god was made known at Dodona by the rustling of the wind through a grove of beech and oak trees, from the branches of which were suspended brazen vessels, which, being moved by the wind, came in contact with one another and resounded throughout the sacred wood. "The prophetic properties of doves," mentioned by Pausanias, refers to another method of delivering the oracle by means of doves or pigeons, which, seated upon the branches of the trees, were supposed to make known the will of Zeus to the priests or priestesses.

CALLIRHOË:

A Legend of Calydon.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

CALLIRHOË, A Maiden of Calydon.

CORESOS, Priest of Dionysos at Calydon.

PRIESTESS OF ZEUS at Dodona.

CHORUS OF PEOPLE OF CALYDON, PRIESTESSES OF DODONA, &c.

The action of Parts I. and III. takes place before the Temple of Dionysos at Calydon; that of Part II. in the Sacred Grove of the Oracle at Dodona.

PART I.

SCENE.—Calydon. The Temple of Dionysos with the statue and altar of the god. Enter CALLIRHOË. She is met by the messengers of CORESOS.

Chorus.

Before the silver-footed dawn
Had risen from the purple sea,
We trod the flow'ry mead to weave
A wreath for thee.

The yellow crocus we have brought,
Narcissus too, and violets sweet,
Our woven chaplets here we lay
Before thy feet.

These tender buds half-open'd lay
Still slumb'ring on the dewy lawn,
See, we have brought them half asleep,
Be thou their dawn.

Wake by thy looks the sleeping flowers,
Shine on them like the sun above,
Oh take the gifts of Coresos
And take his love!

[CALLIRHOË turns disdainfully from the messengers, who leave the temple.
Enter CORESOS.]

Callirhoë.

Take hence your gifts—I crave no flowery wreaths
Nor offerings fit for gods and not for men.
I come to worship, not to prate of love,
Love that I know not, love that I despise!

Coresos.

Oh stony-hearted maid,
Are all my vows in vain?
My gifts, my sighs, my fervent prayers,
My love, my life, that at your feet I laid
Rejected with disdain?

What can I give
Thee more than is already thine?
I only live

To call thee mine.
Turn not away,
In pity hear my prayer,
Callirhoë,

Oh my divinity,
Than sweetest nymph more fair,
To thee for love I pray!

Callirhoë.

Thou seekest love, and I have none to give.
Why ask of me what is not mine?

I love thee not, for love to me
Is but a word whose empty sound
Wakes in me no responsive sign.
For me, to live
Is joy enough, no more felicity
Love can afford than I in life have found.

Coresos.

Spurn not the god who rules the world,
Whose slaves are earth, and air, and sea,
Whose might endures eternally!
When the Olympian gods are hurled
From their high realm, Love still shall last,
His rule alone stands firm and fast,
For love is life, and life is love,
And while life lasts, in Heaven above
Or earth beneath, or midmost air,
Love shall be ruler everywhere.

Despise not love, lest Eros hear
And smite you with his maddest might;
If love you know not, live in fear,
For love least felt is often near,
And Eros' darts are swift of flight.

Callirhoë.

Love I despise! If Eros hear
I dread not all his puny might;
I know not love, and have no fear
That love unfelt should be so near
And Eros' darts be swift of flight.

Coresos.

Beware, rash maid—

Callirhoë.

Your love I spurn!

Coresos.

Oh stay! Oh stay!

Callirhoë.

Let Eros turn
My heart to love, and not till then
Will I believe his might o'er men!

Coresos.

Oh, impious words! the god will hear,
His vengeance swiftly will appear,
Beware—

Callirhoë.

No, no,
I wait the blow
Your god shall deal.

Coresos.

Soon will you feel
The frenzied fire
Which Eros' ire
Sends from above
To those proud hearts
That laugh at love!

Callirhoë.

I laugh, I laugh at love!
The gods may treat me as they will!

Coresos.

Laugh on, laugh on at love!
The gods are swift to work men ill.

[Exit CALLIRHOË. CORESOS kneels before the statue of Dionysos.]

Coresos.

Oh, Dionysos, hearken, I pray thee,
Hear now the voice of thy servant below,
I who am faithful and ever obey thee,
Grant me my boon and thy favour bestow.
Let not the gods in their cloud-compassed dwelling
Turn a deaf ear to the words of disdain;
Let not the maiden rebellious be telling,
The gods may be dared in their own holy fane.
Rise from the banquet, shake off the dull slumber,
Harness thy tigers so silent of tread,
Call up thy terrible hosts without number,
Striking men's souls with strange horror and dread.
Then, as of yore, when Lycurgos expelled thee,
Smite with thy madness and put forth thy power!
Thou didst wreak vengeance on those that repelled thee,
Punish the wrong that was wrought in this hour!

[The image of Dionysos bends solemnly towards CORESOS.]

Coresos.

Lo! while I speak,
The image bends,
Th' insulted god
His vengeance sends!

[Exit CORESOS. Cries of horror are heard without. The temple is filled by a frenzied crowd.]

Chorus.

Oh, horror!
Oh, misery!
Day of terror,
Day of woe!

Strange madness smites us through and through,
 Our veins with liquid fire glow,
 We burn, we rage,
 Can nought assuage
 Nor stay the fiery flow?
 Oh, misery!
 Alas the day!
 Where shall we fly
 Or who will stay
 This plague that smites us grievously?
 Alas! we fail, we die.

The god! the god!
 He is amongst us!
 Ha! Dionysos
 Raging in fury
 Hail! we will greet thee,
 Come forth to meet thee,
 Fierce in our frenzy,
 Faster and faster
 Forth to the master!
 Hark, he is calling,
 In accents appalling!
 Through the air ringing
 Voices are singing,
 Wild laughter pealing,
 In dances now reeling
 The Mænads surrounding,
 His praises are sounding.

Hail! Dionysos!
 Thou shalt rule o'er us!

Oh woe! Oh misery!
 Vague phantoms flit around,
 Pale spectres haunt us
 With gibes they taunt us,
 We sink upon the ground.
 Where shall we fly
 This plague that smites us grievously?
 Alas! we fail, we die.

END OF PART I.

PART II.

SCENE.—The sacred grove of Dodona. In the centre a mighty oak, from the boughs of which are suspended the brazen vessels of divination. Around the oak stand the Priestesses of the Oracle of Zeus.—Enter messengers from Calydon.

Chorus of Messengers.

Hear us, Zeus!

[A sudden wind stirs the branches of the oak so that the brazen vessels resound.]

Hear us, Zeus, for we have sought thee,
 Wandering here with weary feet;
 Gifts and treasure we have brought thee,
 Golden bowls and incense sweet.

Be propitious to our praying,
 And our supplication hear,
 Let thy hand the plague be staying,
 Mighty god, incline thine ear!

[The Chief Priestess advances to meet the Messengers.]

Priestess.

Who comes to rouse the god
 With prayers and golden gifts?

Chorus.

We men of Calydon
 To Zeus have wandered here.

Priestess.

What boon do ye beseech
 That ye so far have strayed?

Chorus.

With sickness strange and sad
 Our land is smitten sore.

Priestess.

Ye who entreat the god
 Must vow his will to work.

Chorus.

We vow that whatso'er
 He bids, we will perform.

[The priestesses begin their rites.]

Chief Priestess.

All-Father Zeus, who dwellest veiled in mystery,
 Within thy sacred grove, great god, to thee I cry.

To those who suppliant stand
 Reveal thy dread command.

Chorus.

A strange sound fills the air,
 The mighty boughs are stirred,
 And soft winds everywhere
 With whisperings low are heard.
 The rustling leaves around
 Fall from the branches sere,
 The brazen vessels sound,
 Be still! the god is near!

The Oracle.—(The Chief Priestess and Chorus of Priestesses.)

Clouds and the shade of darkness hover
 Round the Olympian home,
 None can the god's abode discover
 No mortal thither come.

There Dionysos great appearing
Came, nor came he in vain,
With Coresos' entreaty bearing
Callirhoë's disdain.

Swift summoned by his servant praying
Flew the fell plague of death.
Hear what alone can work its staying,
Hear what the god's voice saith:

Chief Priestess.

“Free must the maiden as an offering
Be to the altar led,
Free must she die, or for her suffering
One must be slain instead.”

Chorus.

Oh dire decree! must such an offering
Be to the altar led?
Must the maid die—or for her suffering
Who will be slain instead?

[Exeunt Messengers.]

END OF PART II.

PART III.

SCENE.—The same as Part I. CALLIRHOË alone.

Callirhoë.

Woe, woe is me! Oh, ne'er was maid
As I so hapless, doomed by fate to die,
Doomed to depart, and fade away from life;
Passing at one fell stroke from gladsome light
To the dark night of cold relentless death!

The sun stands high o'er hill and plain,
The clouds flit white across,
The purple sea is flecked with foam
Where wanton billows toss.
Last night the moon upon the wave
Sank in a dream of light,
When o'er the hill-top in the east
The day broke clear and bright.

To-morrow's sun will rise as red,
To-morrow's moon as fair,
The waves among the rocks will play,
And joy be everywhere.
But I, alas! must go alone
A dark and dismal way,
Down through the gloomy gate of death,
Where dwells no beam of day.

Oh, life and light! for you I die,
Seeing I loved you so,
The unknown love of men I scorned,
Unknowing wrought this woe.
Oh, fields and woods! my years are few,
But I have loved you well;
Oh, sun and moon! oh, earth and sea!
Farewell! a last farewell!

PROCESSIONAL MARCH.

Enter CORESOS, attended by priests. The temple fills with the crowd.

DUET AND CHORUS.

[CORESOS remains standing beside the altar. CALLIRHOË advances to meet him.]

Callirhoë.

Take the offering that I bring thee,
I, who scorned thy words of love,
Take her life who stands before thee,
Victim for the gods above.

Coresos.

Oh, ye gods! will nought appease ye,
Must my hand this maiden slay?
Bitter lot have we to please ye,
When ye crave such cruel prey.

Callirhoë.

Blame them not, the gods immortal
Doom me here to die alone,
Passing through the gloomy portal,
Death my daring will atone.

Coresos.

Though thy fate is full of sorrow,
Mine, oh maid, o'erpasses thine,
In Elysium thou to-morrow,
I on earth in woe must pine.

Chorus.

Coresos! no more delaying!
By thy deed the god obey,
We with torments struck are praying,
Swift thy hand the plague can stay.

Coresos.

Oh, ye gods! for all my praying,
Can ye send no other way?
Must her death the plague be staying,
Must I thus your will obey?

Callirhoë.

Hark! to thee they now are praying
Coresos, no more delay!
Let my death the plague be staying,
Strike, the god's command obey.

Coresos.

[Seizing the sacrificial knife.

Oh thou, my love! oh, fair Callirhoë!
The gods are just, and point the way to me.
'Tis I whose love has wrought these bitter wrongs,
'Tis I alone whose life to death belongs!
Live thou! From love and life I flee.
I love thee so, that here I die for thee!

[Stabs himself.

Chorus.

Ah, Coresos!
What deed is this?

Coresos.

Gods, take your victim—ah, my love, I die.
In death I love thee, love, eternally!

[CORESOS dies at the feet of CALLIRHOË.

Chorus.

Ah, Coresos!
What deed is this?

[CALLIRHOË, bending over CORESOS, takes the knife, and rising, turns to the crowd.

Callirhoë.

Ah! peace! for heard ye not the words he said?
"Love, love eternally!"

And I

Knew not this love, for which men even die,
This mighty love that here before my feet
Has laid the noblest lover—slain and dead!
I who thought life alone was passing sweet
See now a loveless life is vain and bare,
And light of love alone can make life fair.

What is the day without the glorious sun?

What is the night without the lustrous moon?
And what is life when love is past and gone?

But moonless night, and sunless, cheerless noon!

Oh, Eros! in my vain and childish pride
I laughed at love, and dared thy awful might;

But none against thy power may e'er abide,
Lo! thou hast conquered in th' unequal fight.

And thou, my love, is this new love too late?
Thou hast not travelled far the lonely road,
In death's domain, dead love, I bid thee wait,
I come to share with thee thy last abode!

*[She plunges the knife into her breast,
and falls lifeless beside CORESOS.*

Chorus.

Oh, sorrow! double woe!
Your bitter fate we mourn.
So young from life ye go
To realms whence none return.

*[A stream rises from beneath the altar, swelling as it flows into a mighty flood. Nereids and Tritons appear on its waters, surrounding CAL-
LIRHOË and CORESOS, now transformed into river gods.*

Chorus.

Rejoice! ye men of Calydon, the plague is stayed;

And lo! a wonder new is here displayed!

See where yonder, bubbling clear,
Rippling waters now appear,
Gathering streamlets rush along,
Swelling into torrents strong.
On the flood the Nereids rise,
Joy and laughter in their eyes,
And the merry Tritons come
From their distant ocean home.
In their band the youth and maid
Crowned with sedges are arrayed.
Hail, all hail, Callirhoë,
Dwell in love eternally!

The musical score is written in 4/4 time with a key signature of two flats (B-flat and E-flat). The tempo is marked 'Adagio' with a quarter note equal to 60 beats per minute. The score is divided into four systems. The first system shows the vocal line starting with a piano (p) dynamic and a crescendo (cresc.) leading to a triplet of eighth notes. The piano accompaniment begins with a pianissimo (pp) dynamic. The second system continues the vocal line with the lyrics 'heark - en, I pray . . thee, Hear now the voice of thy ser - vant be - low, . .'. The piano accompaniment features a mix of chords and moving lines. The third system has the vocal line singing 'I who am faith - ful, and ev - er o - bey thee, Grant me my boon and thy'. The piano accompaniment includes a mezzo-forte (mf) dynamic. The fourth system concludes with the vocal line singing 'fa - - vour be - stow. Let not the'. The piano accompaniment features a fortissimo (sf) dynamic, a ritardando (rit.), and a return to the original tempo (a tempo.), ending with a forte (f) dynamic. Various articulations like slurs and accents are used throughout.

Exit Coresos. Cries of horror are heard without. The Temple is filled with a frenzied crowd.

The musical score is arranged in systems. The first system shows the piano introduction with dynamics p and sf, and a rehearsal mark R.H.. The second system continues the piano accompaniment with dynamics sf and cres.. The vocal parts (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) enter with a dynamic of f and the lyrics "Oh,". The piano accompaniment continues with dynamics f, ff, and mf. The vocal parts then sing "hor - - - ror! Day of ter - - - ror!" and "Oh, mi - se - ry! Day of". The piano accompaniment concludes with a series of chords and a final dynamic of f.

The first system of music consists of four vocal staves and a piano accompaniment. The vocal parts enter with the lyrics 'ter - nal - ly!' and 'Hail! Call -'. The piano accompaniment features a rhythmic pattern of eighth notes in the right hand and a steady bass line in the left hand.

i - rho - ë! Hail! Call - i - rho - ë! Hail! Hail!
 i - rho - ë! Hail! Call - i - rho - ë! Hail! Hail!

The second system continues the vocal and piano parts. The vocal lines repeat the phrase 'i - rho - ë! Hail! Call - i - rho - ë! Hail! Hail!'. The piano accompaniment maintains its rhythmic accompaniment, with some melodic movement in the right hand.

Hail!

The third system concludes the piece with four vocal staves, each holding a long note for the word 'Hail!'. The piano accompaniment continues with a final cadence, ending with a double bar line and repeat signs.

NOVELLO, EWER & CO.'S MUSIC PRIMERS

EDITED BY
DR. STAINER.

In issuing this series of Music Primers the Editor sees with pleasure the realisation of a desire he has long felt, to place in the hands of teachers and students of music a set of educational works of a high standard at a price so low as to render them attainable by all.

The growing interest in music generally, and rapid spread of its study, so very evident in this country, render it of the utmost importance that the student's first steps in every branch should be directed with skill and object steadily in view, and he believes that the present series of Primers is admirably constructed in detail as it is comprehensive in design.

Such a result would have been impossible but for the hearty support and sympathy of those authors, men of known ability in their special branches of art, who have embodied the results of their long and valuable experience in their respective contributions.

While gratefully acknowledging the kindness of these gentlemen, the Editor cannot but express a hope that the Primers may prove as useful to the public, and as beneficial to art, as both authors and publishers have endeavoured to make them.
